Narrative Summary:

Ten theater and acting classes were given to children in McKinney. The instructors were José Jorge Medina and Marti Etheridge under the direction of Cora Cardona, Teatro Dallas' artistic director. The children decided on their own to take part of this unique experience new to all. Theater games and two scenes inspired by music and a painting were written by the children, the stories staged were chosen by the children based on their simplicity. Two presentations were given to parents and the other children attending the after school activities at the Center.

Aside from stimulating the children's creativity, they learned how to interact, plan among themselves and be leaders. They also learned how to respect and embrace new ideas that helped them improvise and understand how to react to fictitious stimulations while expressing their feelings and having fun.

We postponed two classes due to the ice storm, however; when we returned we were greeted with great enthusiasm. We noticed that some children did not return because they had moved or were ill but we were happy to have new children, who on their own, asked to observe the classes from the beginning and smoothly transitioned themselves in the presentations we gave.

The classes resulted in a parent interested in bringing their son to Dallas during our summer program. All the children were interviewed expressing their great satisfaction about the program and sad to see it end.

This was a successful program and we truly would like to return.

Enclosed please find some photos. A video clip is also available upon request.
